The Story of Sacagawea

In 1804, President Thomas Jefferson sent two men, Meriwether Lewis and William Clark, to explore America to the west of the Mississippi River. Lewis and Clark planned their expedition carefully. In those days, there were no roads or railways and they didn't have any maps.

They left in May 1804. At first, they travelled by boat along the Missouri River. Several months later, they reached Dakota and they spent the winter there. The following spring, Lewis and Clark continued their journey. They didn't know the land and they needed help. A Native American woman offered to guide them. Her name was Sacagawea and she was from the Shoshone Native American tribe.

Lewis and Clark wanted to learn as much as possible about the land. They made maps of the mountains and rivers, kept careful notes and journals and collected examples of new animals and plants to send back home to learn about them. Sacagawea helped Lewis and Clark because she knew all the plants and animals in the forest..

In November 1805, they finally reached the Pacific Ocean in the west. They stayed there for the winter and started their journey home again in March 1806. It took them around six months to get home. The total journey was 13,000 km.
