The house of the future

Anyone can build their own home ¹ that they have land and money. But that might all change - with printable houses. In ² this sounds like science fiction, it's already fact thanks to 3D printing. A company in Russia has already built - or should I say printed - a house in less than a day.

This isn't just clever technology, it's a way of addressing the housing crisis. ³ we find more sustainable ways of building homes, the crisis will only get worse. As ⁴ as people continue to move to urban areas, land will become increasingly limited.

What about ⁵ you already have a house and you want to move? That's easy enough now, but only ⁶ condition that you find the right house. In the future, you may just take your house with you. Several companies are looking into the idea of movable houses, some that are also drones. Why drive to a new city when you could fly your old house there?

So future families who say, 'I wish I ⁷ build my own house.' or 'If only we ⁸ not come here, I want to move' won't need a builder, just a printer.
