Mapuche people are the indigenous inhabitants of Central and Southern Chile and Southern Argentina. Their beliefs have a strong connection with nature. Their three main celebrations and ceremonies are the We Tripantu, nguillatun and machitun.

The We tripantu is the celebration of the Mapuche New Year and the meaning of it is New Dawn (New = We) (Dawn = Tripantu), it is celebrated on June the 24th. They celebrate it because they believe that nature is renewed on this day, they celebrate it with activities in which they offer prayers to Ngenechen (Mapuches's God), they thank him for the blessings of the past year, asking him for a good weather to sow. They also dance "purrún", play game name palin, eat catutos and drink muday. Some families take a bath in a river at dawn to renew their souls.

In a Nguillatun they ask for, prosperity, good sowing and harvest season, good health and strength to Ngenechen. The nguillatun, lasts two or more days. The leader of this ceremony is the machi, who plays the kultrun. The participants offer prayers, dance "purrún", sing a play pifilca, trutruca, etc. Around the "rewe" (altar), they drink muday, eat catutos and meat. As a sacrifice, they kill animals and roosters and burn cereals. Men ride horses and run around all the land. Women wear a long skirt, colors strips and jewels a trapelacucha and trarilonko. Men wear pants and a poncho.

In a Machitun, mapuche people ask for the healing of a person's disease. The machi calls the spirits of forefathers by means of prayers and sing some melodies with the kultrun called "romance". The spirits reveal the cause of the illness and the way to heal it, and they use branches of canelo, which is the mapuche people's sacred tree.
