Busy Bees

Did you know that bees have special jobs?

The queen bee only has one job. She lays eggs. But worker bees do different jobs as they grow. A worker bees' first job is to clean the hive. When a worker bee is three days old, its body makes food. It feeds the unborn baby bees. Many days later, the worker bee begins to make wax. The wax is used to build new honeycomb cells.

Next, the bee becomes a guard. Guards watch over the hive. They sting bears or people who try to get the hive's honey. When it is three weeks old, the bee must fly away from the hive. All alone, it looks for food in fields and flowers. Worker bees have a busy life!
