The website has a header with 'Hungry?' and 'Thirsty?' buttons. Below the header are links for seafood, chicken, noodles, rice dishes, salads, and desserts. The main text says: 'We have listed some of our best-selling starters and main meals to help you decide what to order on your first visit. You will find an explanation of these dishes by clicking here'. Another text block says: 'Our restaurant serves a range of popular dishes from different parts of Asia. Our menu consists of starters, main meals, side dishes and desserts. Your order is taken on a handheld computer and sent to the kitchen, where it is cooked immediately. We want to ensure the freshness of your food so your dish will be delivered to your table as soon as it is ready. This means different dishes may be delivered at different times to your table. Don't wait – just tuck in and share!' To the right is an image of a dish with dark, possibly chocolate-based components. A sidebar on the right lists facts about the restaurant.
