Read the text carefully!

For over two hundred years, people have known that colors have an unexpected effect on our behavior and choices. For example, red makes our hearts beat faster and makes us eat faster. Maybe this is why it is common for fast-food companies to use the color red in their signs. This can also explain why we can't resist red sale signs when we go shopping. Seeing these red signs makes us buy things we wouldn't usually buy. But red isn't the best color for stores; blue is. Studies show that blue makes people spend more money, while green may make us spend less.

The difference between two colors is also important. We usually notice things that look very different from their surroundings. Let's say a webpage is blue, so we trust it for online shopping. But it shouldn't have blue buttons, too. It should have different colored buttons that we'll notice easily. If we notice these buttons, we'll click on them, and probably spend more money.

Decide whether the statement is True or False!

2. Red color makes people spend more money for shopping.
3. Using green color in a big sale isn't a good idea.
4. The blue button in an blue online shopping webpage will trigger people to buy their products.

Complete the sentence. Use the or a comparative or superlative adjective.

5. I think way to exercise is to swim, but my brother thinks running is just as healthy.
6. Do you think red is a color than blue, or do you think both colors are equally popular?

Rewrite each sentence. Use "make" to tell how you feel and an "adverb" to tell how often you do something.
