Dear Editor,
Recently many people have been talking about the evils of teen labour. There are many 'do-gooders' complaining about teens working after school hours and saying that they should be studying instead. I think that they are wrong!
It is a good thing for teenagers to be working. Firstly, it is a normal thing in many countries around the world. If teenagers are not working for some business, they would be working at home. At home, they start at a younger age and usually have more to do but they do not earn any money.
As well, many teenagers waste their time playing video game and hanging out in the streets. They should use their time to help their families, learn new skills and get working experience. Also, I have met many working teenagers and they looked happy and proud that they are working to help their families and earn money for their needs.
There is another reason why teenagers should work. Their energy and fresh ideas help our country and our businesses to become stronger and richer.
The government should not listen to these people. Working is good for teenagers and good for our country! We should support teen employment and give them job more opportunities that will help them become more responsible and earn their own money to be more independent.
Yours faithfully,
David Gee
