Katy Angus lives on Fetlar. Fetlar is an island in the Shetland Isles, in the north of Scotland. On Fetlar there's a primary school. Katy's little sister goes there. The school's got two classrooms, a kitchen, a playground – and five pupils!

Sometimes there are only two or three children at the school, because the population of Fetlar is only 60. The children have got a teacher for English, maths and other subjects, and special teachers visit the school from other islands to teach them art and music.

Katy is 15, so she doesn't go to the school on Fetlar. Every Sunday evening, at five o'clock in winter and at eight o'clock in summer, she gets on a boat to Lerwick, a town on a different island. In Lerwick there's a big secondary school. It's got 800 pupils and some students travel there from the small islands.

Katy and the other students from the small islands stay at the school all week and go home on Friday afternoons. There's a special boarding house where they live, sleep, study and relax during the week. If the weather is very bad, Katy sometimes stays at the school for the weekend, but there are lots of activities and sports there.

Katy likes her week at school with her friends, but she enjoys her weekends at home, too. She always takes her dogs for long walks or she goes to the beach.
