

I) READ THE TEXT

Good manners are important. They show how much you care for your friends or people who surround you. And we tend to learn them from our parents and teachers. It is not what they say, but what they do what we observe and we imitate.

People tend to accept and receive us in a friendly way when we are polite. On the other hand, when we are impolite we receive a negative response from others.

Good manners are just good human relations. The saying goes: "Treat others in the way you would like to be treated". There's no secret about this.

But not everybody behaves in the same way over the world. Each culture has its own code. That is why we must learn about the culture of a country we plan to visit. When we know to behave, we can establish better relations.
