ABOUT ME

My favourite episode of ...

SHERLOCK

Everybody who reads this blog knows that I love detective stories, and that I'm a massive fan of Sherlock, the BBC TV series. I always liked the classic Conan Doyle stories but wasn't sure if this modern version would work, but what's not to like? It's clever, entertaining and it's set in London!

Last week, I told you that I was watching the whole series again, and you asked me what my favourite episode was. It was hard to choose just one! But in the end, I said that it was 'The Reichenbach Fall' episode. Why? It's just so well written, with all the best ingredients of a great Sherlock story: the unbelievable intelligence of Sherlock Holmes, his loyal 'assistant' Dr Watson, and a sudden appearance of the evil Moriarty, Sherlock's worst enemy.

At the beginning of the episode, everything seemed fine for Sherlock. He was enjoying his fame as the UK's best detective, because he'd found a famous missing painting which had been stolen in a robbery by some art thieves. However, Watson wasn't happy. He told Sherlock that he needed to be careful, because the public attention could become negative.

And that's when Moriarty appears. What I like about Moriarty is that he's not a traditional 'baddy', he's a modern cybercriminal. He can unlock jail cells straight from his mobile phone, and has a secret code which means that he can hack into any security system in the world.

In this episode, we see Moriarty commit some impossible crimes, including a robbery at the Bank of England and a burglary at the Tower of London – home of the crown jewels. But he doesn't steal anything – it's part of his plan to convince people that Sherlock is dishonest and irresponsible.

Now, I'll stop there. Last time readers told me I'd ruined a TV show for them because I talked about how the show ended! But as usual, be prepared for a totally unexpected ending – and let me know what you think!

Don't forget to post comments about your favourite Sherlock episode.
