

The First Thanksgiving

Put the events in order. Use the numbers 1-4.

The Pilgrims were ready and excited to begin their new life, but soon found out that the winters in this New World were more severe than winters in England and their food and supplies were very limited.

The Pilgrims had traveled from England and reached land. They called it the New World.

We celebrate by gathering with our families and friends to give thanks for the many blessings in our lives.

Most of the Pilgrims grew ill, and many died that winter. The next season, the native people of this New World taught them new and better ways to grow crops, so they'd never again run out of food.
