Activity 3. Reading Comprehension.

Bob Marley was born in 1945 in Jamaica. His father was in the navy and was often away at sea, so Marley didn't see him very often. His family was poor, and Marley left school when he was fourteen because he wanted to be a musician.

He was a singer, and he also played the guitar. In 1964 he met some other musicians who played the drums, keyboard, and guitar. They formed a band, the Wailers, and they started recording reggae music. Reggae music was popular in Jamaica at that time, but not many people in other parts of the world knew about it. Bob Marley and the Wailers made reggae music popular all over the world. Their albums Exodus (1977) and Kaya (1978) made Marley an international star. Bob Marley died in 1981, when he was only 36 years old, but many people still listen to his music today. A lot of Marley's songs were about the problems of black people and poor people, and his music and political ideas still influence many young musicians.
