

Read the dialogue between Mr. Hamed, an English teacher, and Nasser, a 17-year-old student. Look at the underlined verb forms and decide which ones are past simple and which ones are past continuous.

Nasser: You(1) wanted to see me, Mr Hamed?

Mr Hamed: Yes, Nasser, I did. What (2)was wrong with you in class today?

Nasser: What do you mean?

Mr Hamed: You (3) were falling asleep in my lesson. You (4) weren't paying attention to My questions. When I(5) looked at you, I (6)saw that your eyes (7)were closing. And you were snoring too!

Nasser: No, really, Mr Hamed, I ...

Mr Hamed: What time (8)did you go to bed last night?

Nasser: Er .. um ... ten o'clock. I(9) did my homework, then I (10)watched a bit of television, then I(11) went to bed.

Mr Hamed: (suspiciously): (12)Did you go to sleep straightaway?

Nasser: Well ... er ... no, not exactly. I (13)was working online, then I (14)chatted to one or two friends.

Mr Hamed: In other words, you(15) were chatting on the Internet all night. What time (16)did you really go to sleep?

Nasser: Um ... half past two, I think. No, three.

Mr Hamed: So that's why you're so tired today. Now listen to me, Nasser. You can't go on like this. You need to get more sleep. You've got exams soon. Don't let this happen again!
