

I am speaking to you at what I know is an increasingly _____ time. A time of _____ in the life of our country: a _____ that has brought _____ to some, financial _____ to many, and enormous _____ to the daily lives of us all.

I want to thank everyone on the NHS _____, as well as _____ and those carrying out essential roles, who _____ continue their day-to-day _____ outside the home in _____ of us all. I am sure the nation _____ me in assuring you that what you do is _____ and every hour of your hard work brings us _____ to a return to more _____ times.

I also want to thank those of you who _____ at home, _____ helping to protect the _____ and sparing many families the _____ already felt by those who have lost _____. Together we are _____ this _____, and I want to _____ you that if we remain united and resolute, then we will overcome it.

I hope in the years to come everyone will be able to _____ in how they responded to this challenge.

.....
And _____ self-isolating may at times be _____, many people of all faiths, and of none, are discovering that it _____ an opportunity to _____, pause and reflect, in prayer or meditation.

It reminds me _____ the very first _____ I made, in 1940, helped by my sister. We, as children, spoke from here at Windsor to children who had been _____ from their homes and _____ away for their own _____. Today, once again, many will feel a _____ sense of separation from their loved ones.

But now, as then, we know, _____, that it is the right thing to do.

While we have faced _____ before, this one is different. This time we join with all _____ across the globe in a common _____, using the great _____ of science and our instinctive compassion to _____.

We _____ - and that _____ will belong to every one of us.

We should take _____ that while we may have more still to _____, better days will return: we will be with our _____ again; we will be with our _____ again; we will _____ again.

But for now, I send my thanks and _____ good wishes to you all.