Reason and common sense

Generally regarded as a golden age, the 18th century in England was called 'Augustan' after the period of Roman history which had achieved political (0) STABILITY and power as well as a flourishing of the arts.

STABLE

In fact, it was an age of wise (1), of elegance and wit, but also a distinctive moment in the making of modern England. It was a (2)society – worldly, pragmatic,

TRADITION

Yet, its political institutions were (4)

MATERIAL RESPONSE HIERARCHY

BRIBE INDIVIDUAL

Society in the 18th century championed (6)

INDIVIDUAL

seizing opportunities in the sectors of economy which provided scope for initiative, enterprise and enrichment.

ORDINARY

(8) encouraged faith in progress and human

OPTIMISTIC

perfectibility, and made people eager to try new ways, trusting their own powers: reason, which made them different from animals, and common sense.

