• TEXT 1

For the fourth time in as many years, they (1-confront) with the problem of what birthday present to take to a young man who was incurably deranged in his mind. Desires he had none. Man-made objects (2-be) to him either hives of evil, vibrant with a malignant activity that he alone could perceive, or gross comforts for which no use could be found in his abstract world. After eliminating a number of articles that might offend him or frighten him (anything in the gadget line, for instance, was taboo), his parents (3-choose) a dainty and innocent trifle—a basket with ten different fruit jellies in ten little jars.

• TEXT 2

Mrs. Shaw and Gopal (1-be) neighbors for about two years. She was a guidance counselor at the high school his daughter had attended. He also learned that she (2-divorce) for a decade. Although he did not dislike Mrs. Shaw, Gopal (3-irritate) by the peeling paint on her house and the weeds sprouting out of her broken asphalt driveway, as if by association his house were becoming shabbier. The various cars that left her house late at night made him see her as dissolute. But all this Gopal was willing to forget that morning, in exchange for even a minor friendship.

• TEXT 3

It was always Amrak's job to deal with the birds afterwards, and he (1-hate) always it. Every day after the service he would have to wait for the worshippers to leave, then hang around while Father and the other priests finished up. As soon as they were gone the work began—gathering the dirty robes into a basket to take outside to the waiting washerwomen, piling up the silver bowls to carry to the kitchen to be cleaned. Amrak (2-ask) his father many times if he could rather wash the bowls, but his request (3-refuse) always. "Do what I tell you, son," Father always said. "No questions."

• TEXT 4

The orange sun peeked from behind the empty hills and (1-find) two sets of furrowed brows. On the driver seat, Michael lowered the sun visor, and his frown dissolved. On the passenger seat, his son did the same, and his frown didn't move. Kevin's eyes (2-lose) beyond the hills, his arms crossed, his hands fiddling with the cord of the headphones. "I (3-hate) this time of day," Michael said. There was no response from the passenger seat.
