THE GREAT NURSERY ESCAPE

Two boys aged five dug under the fence of their Russian kindergarten playground in order to walk to a Jaguar car showroom to buy a 'grown-up car'. After using their sand spades over several days to dig their 'tunnel', the boys escaped from under their teacher's nose during an afternoon walk.

They then walked several miles to the Jaguar showroom in the Urals industrial city of Magnitogorsk. As police hunted for the friends, a woman noticed them looking at the expensive sports cars and asked them what they were doing. They happily told her they were there because their daddies' cars were so similar to the ones they could see in the shop window, The Siberian Times reported. Eventually, the woman handed the boys over to the police.

Their worried parents decided not to complain at the shop when they realised that the children were safe. But the kindergarten teacher in charge of the boys was fired. As Olga Denisenko, Head of Pre-School Education in the city, explained: 'This is a very serious violation of rules. The head of the group that allowed this to happen had to leave.'

Sadly for the boys, they didn't get their dream car, but they did have a couple of hours of freedom.
