Matilda's parents do just the opposite: they sit glued to the television and demand that she do the same, even though she would much rather read one of her library books.

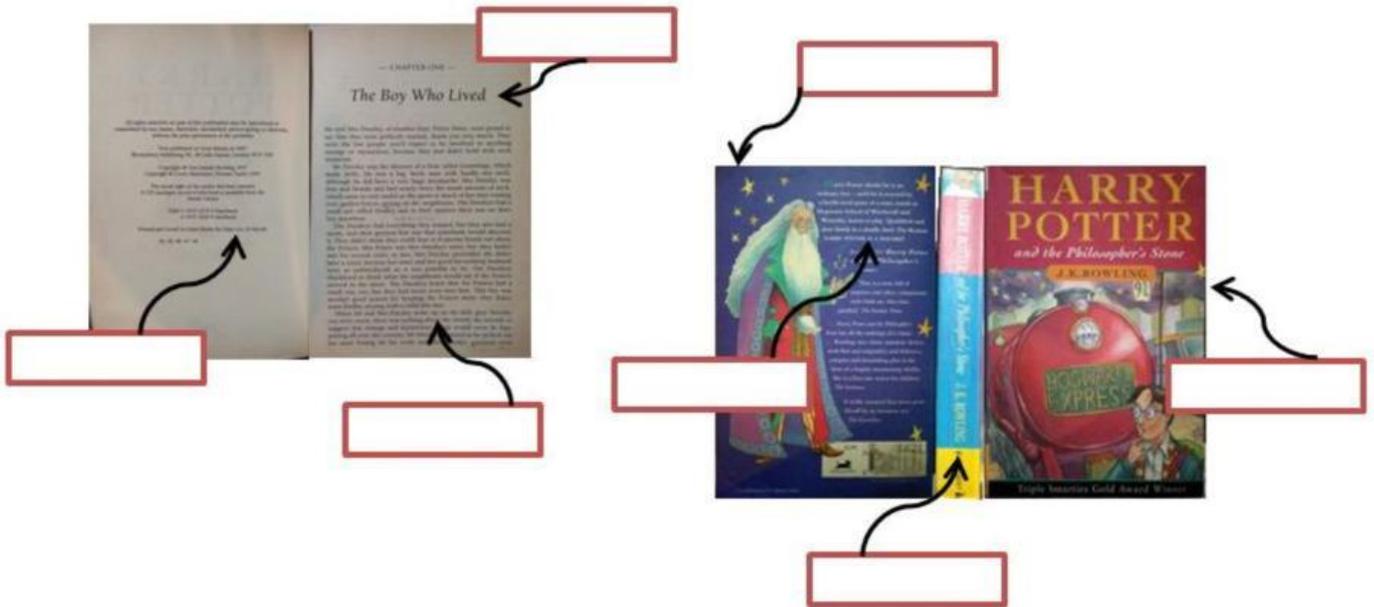

"Chilled Charlie chewed his chewing gum so cheerfully that nobody dare to dance there..."

"splash, splash, splash!"

It sounded repeatedly sometime before Willson stack it to the window.

"Our bodies were so skinny and squeezed we got the feeling that if we were watched hardly we would smash into a thousand pieces, like a porcelain figure."
