

SILENT SURRENDER
By: Sharmane C. Miller

Like a predator, it creeps up slowly
Stalking its helpless prey
Lurking in the darkness
Waiting to whisk tired ones away.

Unaware of its presence
The innocent begin to yawn
Stretching and rubbing eyes
Thinking it will soon be gone.

They nod and dive unwillingly
Fighting to keep their conscious state
Trying to complete their evening chores
Before it is too late.

But just when they think they're safe
It grips them by surprise
So they willingly surrender their bodies
And gladly, close their eyes.
