Customs around the world

We studied customs at school last term. We watched a film that showed us all about the different ways people behave.

In the film, we saw people in Japan. They had some soup, but they didn't eat it with a spoon. They picked up the bowl of soup and drank it, like drinking from a cup. We saw people in Mexico eating tacos with their hands. In Chile, however, they preferred fried chips, and they ate them with a knife and fork.

The people in China always left some food on their plates to show that they were full and not hungry anymore.

In Ethiopia, they didn't need plates when they ate. They put all the food onto some large round bread and then picked up a little bit of the bread and food with their hands. That sounds really interesting. I would like to try eating food that way.
