

Poem by Luísa Villalta.
Click the text to listen,
then choose the correct words.

Through this _____ the sound of life lays out a lightset.

Left and right disagree the _____ of the crowd,
for they are only locks caught in that nameless hydra.

A _____ splits site that moves and I follow through.

Through this forest a device mimics an inhuman wind.

The _____ entangle in rhetorical cables,
electric shocks that do not thrill me.

I seek the natural voice, the echo of a chant and the rose of the centre.

The _____ combs this forest idle with streetlamps and posts.

The artificial _____ does not let us think we are dreaming.

(From "Study of the Shadows")