Exercise 2

Most robots today are industrial robots. Humans use them to make work easier and quicker. You often see them in car factories (36)they put the parts of the cars together. They are useful for this kind of work as it is 'dull, dirty and dangerous' - DVD. Robots are often used for DDD jobs and where a specific action needs to be repeated. It is very difficult (37)humans to do this. There are many different types of robots. Some robots travel through space, work on the bottom of the ocean, or go inside volcanoes. They do the work of people, but for a different reason this time: there are places that are very dangerous for people, or (38)for people to go to. Robots are everywhere. Most people don't know that robots help us every day and in many different ways. In most houses, there are robots. For example, in some houses today there is a (39)machine in the kitchen. Washing machines are robots. People can programme them and then they wash clothes automatically. Some scientists make robots for fun. For example, the dogs are made as toys for small children. Japan produces the most robots. Every year in the capital, Tokyo, there is a robot (40)called Robodex. It is the largest robot exhibition in the world.
