A bad night's sleep

It was a very cold night in the forest. An explorer, Jean, was alone in her tent when something cold fell onto her sleeping bag. She climbed out of her sleeping bag and picked up her torch. When she opened her tent, she saw that it was snowing. A lot! When she looked at her tent, she saw a hole in the roof. The snow was falling into her tent!

Jean went to her rucksack. She found a plastic sheet in the rucksack and put it over the hole. The snow wasn't falling into the tent any more. 'Now I can go back to sleep,' she thought. She was very tired and her back was hurting because her rucksack was very heavy.

When she was back in her sleeping bag, she heard something strange. It was very quiet, but it was inside the tent. She held her torch and turned it on. She couldn't see anything but the sound was still there. She moved towards her rucksack and the sound got louder. Something was in her rucksack! She opened her rucksack and saw a little mouse eating her biscuits, crunch, crunch, crunch. She didn't want to put the mouse outside in the snow, so she let it eat her biscuits. 'Snow in my tent, heavy rucksacks, mice ...', she thought. 'Why am I an explorer?'
