Exercise 2: Read the following passage and do the tasks below (1 point)

In many places, some children don't have many books to read. This can make it hard for them to learn and imagine exciting stories. But something wonderful is happening - people are giving books to these children.

Giving books to kids is like giving them a treasure. It helps them learn new things, imagine amazing adventures, and discover the world through words. Groups of kind people often gather books and give them to kids who don't have many. They do this because they care about children and want to see them smile.

Imagine a group called "Book Buddies." They collect books and share them with children in need. These kids receive their very own books and their eyes light up with joy! Having a book to read is like having a friend. It's exciting and brings so much happiness.
