

Magic archaeology | ,ɑ:kɪ'plədʒi|

The after school magic clubs.

Some children in Great Britain do very interesting activities after school lessons.

They learn how to do magic tricks. They use cards, coins, magic wands and ropes for the magic tricks. The students in this kind of clubs also study performing to an audience.

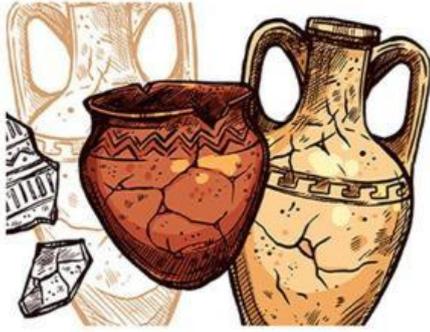

This skill helps a lot.

Because many club members, who are quiet and shy, start to study and make friends easily.

Two times a year the parents can see a special show where the students perform the magic tricks. And it's fun to perform to an audience of friends.

Would you like to join a magic club?

The archaeology school clubs.

Archaeology helps to explore History. The club members learn amazing facts which can tell us about the past.

The students walk around their towns and compare them with old photos. There are a lot of changes. Did you see any old photos of your town?

The club members sometimes have to wash different things. It is interesting to clean them carefully with a brush. A thing which people take out of the ground is called an "artefact". The children discuss their stories. They learn where the artefacts are from and what people used them for. The students have special albums to draw the artefacts. Do you like this kind of clubs?

Fact file

- Cards, magic wands, ropes and [redacted] are things which the students use for tricks.
- The club members learn how to perform to an [redacted].
- The magic club helps students, who are shy and [redacted].
- The parents can see a magic show [redacted] times a year.
- [redacted] helps to learn more about the past.
- The club member uses a [redacted] to clean the things.
- An [redacted] is a thing which people take out of the ground.
- The children draw artefacts in their special [redacted].