Read the text carefully (text for questions number 1 to 3)

Once upon a time, there was a little mouse named Max who lived in a small village. Max was known for his bravery and determination, and he was always eager for an adventure. However, one day he found himself facing his biggest challenge yet.

"The village is under attack!" cried out Max's friend, a fellow mouse named Minie. "A group of cats are determined to take over and we have to do something about it."

Max didn't hesitate. He rallied all the mice in the village and together they came up with a plan to defend their homes. "We'll dig a trench around the village and fill it with water," Max declared. "The cats won't be able to cross it."

The mice worked tirelessly, digging the trench and filling it with water. When the cats arrived, they were met with a surprise. They tried to cross the trench, but they couldn't. The mice cheered as they watched the cats retreat in defeat.

Max was hailed as a hero, and the village was safe once again. He was proud to have stood up to the challenge and saved his home and friends. From that day on, Max was known not just for his bravery and determination, but also for his cunning and strategic thinking.

The text for question number 8-10

Giant Swallowtail

The giant swallowtail (Papilio Cresphontes) is a wonderfully “exotic” looking butterfly. They are widely spread in various parts of North America, particularly in the south and the east. With a wingspan about 10-16 cm, it is the largest butterfly in Canada and the United States.

The body and wings are dark brown to black with yellow bands. There is a yellow “eye” in each wing's tail. The abdomen has bands of yellow along with the previously mentioned brown.

Papilio Cresphontes is mostly seen in deciduous forest that falling of its leaves annually and in citrus orchards where they are considered major pest. Some animals defend themselves from predator by mimicry but the giant swallowtail wards off the predators by producing polymorphism liquid. They fly between May to August where there are two broods in the north and three in the south. Their main habitat is the mountain ranges in Jamaica. Swallowtail butterflies begin with eggs. When they are hatched, they grow into caterpillars before changing into chrysalis. Soon they will become adult butterflies.
