International Day

Yesterday at my school we had International Day. We had performances, food stalls, displays, raffle ticket draw and some of us were dressed in costumes. We started our day off with performances but the one I liked best was the one from fourth grade. It was about games. The performance I was in was called Labamba.

Everyone had a job. These people were from sixth grade. I did my job after I had lunch. My job was to sell International Day Books. We had displays in the hall. These displays were good but I didn't get to see them. The displays came from a lot of countries. There was also a Trash and Treasure stall where they sell toys. The school got these things by asking the children to bring them in.

After lunch, we had a raffle ticket draw. I didn't win anything but a lot of people did. Although I didn't win anything. International Day was still fun.

itself can improve your health. Then, when you're ready, try to take off some extra pounds for an even greater health boost.
2. Exercise Regularly
Few things are as good for you as regular physical activity. While it can be hard to find the time, it's important to fit in at least 30 minutes of activity every day. More is even better, but any amount is better than none.
3. Don't Smoke
You've heard it before: If you smoke, quitting is absolutely the best thing you can do for your health. Yes, it's hard, but it's also far from impossible. More than 1,000 Americans stop for good every day.
4. Eat a Healthy Diet
Despite confusing news reports, the basics of healthy eating are actually quite straightforward. You should focus on fruits, vegetables and whole grains and keep red meat to a minimum. It's also important to cut back on bad fats (saturated and trans fats) and choose healthy fats (polyunsaturated and monounsaturated fats) more often. Taking a multivitamin with folate every day is a great nutrition insurance policy.

The text mainly tells us about....

A. Eating a healthy diet
B. Maintaining a healthy weight

Laptop

A laptop is a kind of computer unit which has the same function as a PC (Personal Computer), but it's smaller, lighter and of different sizes. Nowadays, most people choose laptops for several reasons.

A laptop is a portable device. This portability is very helpful for our work, study and other activities. We do not need complicated cable installations to activate a laptop. With a laptop, we can do our work anytime and anywhere.

Moreover, a laptop allows us to access the internet in public places which provide free access called hot spot areas. Some people like to use this facility to carry out their tasks.

Finally, a laptop consumes energy more efficiently than a PC does. This device uses a rechargeable battery as a source of electric energy. So, if we prefer using a laptop, it means that we support the government program to save energy. That's why a laptop has become very popular recently.

What is the purpose of the text above?

A. To describe about a laptop
B. To inform the readers about a laptop
C. To give opinions about a laptop
D. To tell the story about a laptop
E. To retell the experience about using a laptop
