DELIVERY BY ROBOT

Imagine this. You're hungry so you use an app on your phone to order a pizza. Thirty minutes later, (1) the pizza arrives, you open the door and a small robot, shaped like a box with six wheels, waits outside. You take your pizza out of the box, the robot says "Have a nice day." and rolls away. This is not science fiction! A small but growing number of these delivery robots can already be seen in various cities, (2) they are delivering all kinds of small packages. They are popular with customers (3) want small items or food delivered quickly at low cost. If you are wondering (4) robots are being used instead of delivery people, the answer is simple. Delivery people usually use cars, trucks and scooters, all of (5) contribute to traffic jams and pollution in cities. Experts believe delivery robots are (6) we need to help solve these problems. These robots, (7) design includes cameras and a GPS system, can find their way around without bumping into anyone or anything. What is more, they run on batteries (8) don't cause as much pollution. So far, the delivery robots have proven very successful and we are likely to see a lot more of them in the future.
