

True Colours

People who wear white want to be thought as thoughtful, open-minded and considerate. Lovers of white can also be determinate and calculating.

Those who dress mainly in black hope that it makes them look cool and mysterious. However, wearing black is often a sign of insecurity and may even mean that you are a little selfish.

Red is a stimulating colour. It's a good idea to wear it when your energy levels are low and avoid it if you're feeling angry or irritated. Red stimulates passion and if you frequently choose it in the morning, you want to be seen positive and sexy. You also tend to be moody and others should beware of your fiery temper.

Yellow develops mental activity, co-ordination and communication. If you're feeling tired or run-down it's a good choice. "Yellow people" are outgoing and great fun to be with. Unfortunately they've also a good reputation for being a tiny bit immature.

Blue is a calming colour so if it's your favourite colour you are probably calm and peaceful. It stimulates your ability to let go of past and move forward. Blue people are often hardworking and determined. Unfortunately they are also pretty mean when it comes to money and giving presents.

Green is the colour of new life and it stimulates the growth of new ideas. Green also awakens compassion and warm feelings towards others. Green-lovers are very competitive and outspoken when it comes to telling others that they're wrong about something.

Orange is an all-round stimulant. It can increase your health and vitality as well as brighten your mood. If when you open up your wardrobe orange is your main view, you are creative, friendly, happy and self-confident. The only problems are that orange lovers are quite often inconsiderate and tend to let other people down.
