V. Read the passage and circle T (True) or F (False).

How do we challenge body shaming?

Expressing true feelings rather than physical criticisms can be a great first step. While recently discussing this with the Adolescent IOP (Adolescent Intensive Outpatient Programs), several patients admitted that it is hard to identify ways of expressing frustration without using body-shaming, as this has become an almost automatic response.

Practice identifying why you are upset about a situation. For example, it's unlikely that you're mad at a friend because she's breaking out, and more likely that you're upset about a miscommunication or feeling of rejection. Practice thinking it, and eventually, verbalizing it.

Identify who in your life is body-positive - or even body-neutral. Think of people who celebrate their body for what it can do, and people who refuse to comment on others' physical appearances. Spending time with these people can be especially helpful while you are struggling with your own internalized body-shaming and help you view yourself - and others - more positively.

Confront those who perpetuate body-shaming. Once you've become more aware of your own body-shaming behaviors, you may notice how often your friends, family or co-workers do it. Talk to them. Discuss why it bothers you and help them see how it may also be hurtful to them.

Find something (or things) you LIKE about your body. We spend so much time witnessing advertisements about how to make our eyelashes millimeters longer and how to get whiter teeth that it'd be nice to counter some of that by celebrating what we do have. Maybe, despite your body image struggles, you love a new hairstyle you discovered. Maybe you've noticed how much stronger you feel with balanced eating. Find something physical or nonphysical that makes you YOU and celebrate it every day.

- _____ 1. The first step to deal with body shaming is to express criticisms about your physical appearance.
- _____ 2. IOP is the abbreviation of Adolescent Intensive Outpatient Programs.
- _____ 3. Some patients have difficulty in determining how to express frustration without using physical humiliation.
- _____ 4. You may be upset by being misunderstood or feeling rejected.
- _____ 5. Spending time with the people who celebrate their bodies can help you view yourself more positively.
- _____ 6. Stay away from those who perpetuate body-shaming behaviour.
- _____ 7. Don't waste time finding things you like about your physical appearance.
- _____ 8. Find something that makes you YOU and celebrate it every day.
