How to Interview for a Job!

Congratulations!¹ You've applied² for several jobs in the past few weeks, and you just found an email in your inbox inviting you to your first job interview next Tuesday. That's great! But don't get too excited . . . the job isn't yours yet! You still have to attend an interview before you get hired³. And almost certainly there will be many other people interviewing for the same job! Here, then, are eight important things that you should know about interviewing – so that you can get that job you've always wanted.

1. First, go online and find out as much as you can about the company and the position that you are applying for. This is important because you want a job that is right for you. For example, you might not really want the job if you have to work on weekends or late at night. As well, it shows the interviewers that you are a serious applicant⁴ – someone who may stay with the company for a long time.
2. Before the interview, prepare a list of questions that you think the interviewers may ask you. Then, practice answering them, perhaps with a friend.
3. Dress well for the interview. However, this doesn't mean that you have to arrive for the interview wearing a suit and tie, especially, for example, if you are interviewing for a job as a waiter or a waitress.
4. Arrive a few minutes early. Arriving late for an interview is never a good thing.
5. There may be two or three interviewers, and it's always very polite to give each of them a printed copy of your resumé⁵. Bring several copies of your resumé with you.
6. Smile, be friendly, and be confident. Use good eye contact⁶ and body language⁷. Remember to relax, because, if you feel nervous, you will look and sound nervous.
7. Prepare a few appropriate⁸ questions to ask your interviewers. Make sure to avoid asking questions like, "How many holidays will I get?"
8. Finally, email your interviewers (after a day or two) and thank them for their time.

What other job interview advice can you think of?
