São Paulo, July 20, 2008

Dear Lola,

I've been in Brazil for two days now. I arrived in São Paulo yesterday after an eight-hour flight from New York. What an exhausting journey it was! I came here with my mom, dad and Curtis. I'm staying at my uncle's home. This morning Uncle Frank drove us to Rio de Janeiro. We wanted to see Christ the Redeemer. It is located at the peak of the Corcovado Mountain. To reach this world wonder, we rode the train for twenty minutes from the Corcovado Rack Railway. The train leaves the base every half hour. Do you know what? The view from the train was really breathtaking. It looked more beautiful than it looked in the guide book. I didn't spend my time playing games on the Portable Play Station, like what Curtis did. I started taking pictures from the train. As we arrived at the train terminal, I trekked up 60 meters to the statue. My mom took an escalator. Actually, visitors can use escalators or elevators to the monument. Christ the Redeemer is so magnificent. It stands 40 meters and it looks over the city. The view from up there is truly remarkable. We were there for two hours. We enjoyed the beauty of the setting sun. Curtis and I took so many pictures. I'll show them to you as soon as I get back home.

Cheerio!

Be More Confident!

Robby is an attractive young man. With his bright blue eyes and dimples, he just looks like a cover boy. However, Robby used to feel very insecure about his appearance. At school, he seemed to have few friends. The reason why he was so reserved was that he had a dandruff problem. He never wanted to go to a barber for a hair cut. He chose to travel quite a long distance to have his aunt, who used to be a hair dresser, cut his hair. But these days, Robby is more confident. His brown hair looks gorgeous. Thanks to Healthy Hair.

Dandruff is a condition in which flakes of dead skin fall from the scalp. Actually, it is normal for skin cells to die and flake off. A small amount of flaking is quite common. But an unusually large amount of flaking gives problems. Excessive flaking can also be a manifestation of an allergic reaction to chemicals in hair gels, sprays, or sometimes even dandruff medications. But there is no evidence that food, too much perspiration and climate have any role in a dandruff problem.

Most cases of dandruff can be easily treated with a specialized shampoo. Healthy Hair shampoo that contains selenium helps treat a dandruff problem. Healthy Hair has helped Robby and others like him to boost their self-esteem.

If you have the same problem with Robby, you can try Healthy Hair. For more information, call 021-536 739.
