Richard Reed _____¹ (found) Innocent in 1998 with two friends from Cambridge University, Adam Balon and Jon Wright.

Unlike some entrepreneurs, all three men _____² (do) 'proper jobs'. When they _____³ (leave) university, they all got jobs with top companies: one went into advertising and two went into management consultancy. But the dream which they all _____⁴ (share) was to start their own business one day.

Four years later, they _____⁵ (leave) their jobs and decided to go into business together. This was after a snowboarding holiday where they _____⁶ (spent) the whole time talking about how to become entrepreneurs.

They _____⁷ (want) to start a business which would appeal to people like them.

The result was Innocent, a drinks company producing pure fruit smoothies. The company _____⁸ (develop) new products since it was founded. It _____⁹ (increase) its range of products to more than 30 different recipes and sells more than two million smoothies each week through 10,000 retailers in the UK and overseas.

Since Reed and his friends launched Innocent, the company _____¹⁰ (grow) by 20% year-on-year and it currently has a 75% share of the smoothie market. In April 2009, Coca-Cola _____¹¹ (buy) an 18% stake in the company for £30 million. A year later, it _____¹² (pay) £65 million for a 58% stake.
