Part 2: Listen and fill in the blanks with ONLY ONE WORD or A NUMBER:

Last week, a twenty-eight-year-old diver who went swimming in the Red Sea with a group of dolphins learnt the hard way just how (1)_____these creatures can be. When the diver was suddenly attacked by a shark, they saved him by forming a circle around him and frightening the shark away. It's not the (2)_____time such a rescue has happened and it's been known for some time that dolphins will do for humans what they do for their own kind. They are, in fact, the only animals in the world whose (3)_____match ours in terms of size, and their intelligence and ability to feel

(4)_____continue to fascinate scientists and doctors alike. For some time now, their healing powers have been well known. A swim with a group of dolphins, for example, is a recognised ‘medical’ activity for everyday problems such as stress. But some dolphins are playing a far more (5)_____medical role for us than that. In one such project, dolphins are being used to help children who are (6)_____learners learn to read. The dolphins do things like carrying small boards on their noses. These boards show words or (7)_____which the children are asked to identify. When the children get it right, they spend more time swimming with the dolphins and touching them and they see this as a (8)_____. So what is it that makes contact with dolphins so powerful? They certainly have an engaging smile in each jaw they have up to (9)_____teeth, but rather than frightening us to death, it’s one of the warmest greetings in the world! They’re also (10)_____swimmers to watch.
