

Make this paragraph about the relationship that humans have with dogs and wolves correct by adding in the correct punctuation: , OR .

One way that dogs and wolves differ is in their relationship with humans ___. Dogs are generally friendly and helpful around humans ___. This is probably ___ because they have been living closely with humans for thousands of years ___. No one knows exactly why early wolves (ancestors of dogs) approached humans and began living with them ___, but these tamer individuals gradually evolved into the dogs we know today ___. Overtime, dogs and humans developed a mutually beneficial relationship: humans sheltered and fed dogs ___, and dogs did jobs for humans ___. For example ___, dogs helped early humans hunt ___. Wolves ___, on the other hand ___, are shy and fearful of humans ___. One reason for this is that wolves are generally afraid of anything that is unfamiliar ___. This tendency most likely evolved as a survival strategy ___. Anything unfamiliar in a wolf's environment is a potential danger ___, so this fear helps it avoid threats to its existence ___. As a result ___, wolves are less likely to interact with humans ___.

Ready? Check your answers on R&W p. 21E

Bringing the world to the classroom
and the classroom to life

A PART OF CENGAGE

© 2024 National Geographic Learning, a Cengage Learning Company. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED.