Life without smell or taste

What is it like to live with no sense of taste or smell? This is the reality for approximately 5% of the population of Europe and the USA. It sometimes happens as a result of an infection or a brain injury. It can be connected to old age, too, as our sense of smell and taste get worse after the age of 75. Many people with Covid-19 have also experienced a loss of smell or taste, although most recover their senses after a few weeks or months. It is a serious problem because it often leaves people feeling lonely and like they aren't connected to the world anymore.

Smell is responsible for 80% of the flavours we taste, which is why most people who think they have lost their sense of taste have in fact lost their sense of smell. To many of us, it might not sound like a serious problem and doctors may not consider it important enough to treat. However, losing this sense affects our enjoyment of food, which can seriously affect our quality of life. It can also be dangerous, for example, if we are not able to smell gas when a cooker has been left on by mistake or if something is burning.

Some researchers think that people who lose their sense of smell feel depressed for much longer than people who lose their sight. One reason for this is that smell is important for our memory and losing that link to our past is very hard to deal with. It can have long-lasting and devastating effects.

17 Read the text again. Choose the correct options.

- 1 Losing your sense of smell and taste makes you ...
 - a more likely to get an infection
 - b feel less connected to the world
 - c less likely to catch Covid-19

 - a We can't taste 80% of flavours.
 - b We don't enjoy food in the same way as before.
 - c We make more mistakes when cooking food.
- 3 Why can losing your sense of smell be dangerous?
 - a You might not smell gas.
 - b You can't eat enough food.
 - c You can also lose your sense of taste.
- 4 Some researchers think that ...
 - a people who lose their sight often lose their sense of smell.
 - b losing your sense of smell can lead to depression that lasts for a long time.
 - c our sense of smell isn't important for our memory.
