Reading

2 Read the passage carefully and choose the correct answer to each question.

Mr Jones was a small business owner and had his own grocer's shop. He sold a wide range of goods including fresh fruit and vegetables from local farms. The business had been in the family for two or three generations. The staff were satisfied and so were the customers. They liked to visit the shop and to have their groceries delivered to their house. Mr Jones and his father and grandfather before him were very happy people and always smiling. The customers thought it was because they ran a successful business.
My Jones always wore a badge that said 'Business is Great'. People asked Mr Jones what was so great about his business and he told them that he enjoyed meeting and talking to people every day, helping them and working in a relaxed environment. Even unhappy people would feel better after visiting Mr Jones' shop and seeing how happy he was. When it came time to retire and pass on the family business to his son, he made him promise to wear the badge every day as he had done. Then he confided in him something that he had never told anyone else. "The badge came first and the great business followed," he said.
