A Shakespearian Weekend

Join us for a weekend of Shakespeare's plays, poems and sonnets, along with workshops and lectures on his life and work.

Friday 6th August

Morning session – we start this weekend of Shakespeare with a lecture on the life of the playwright, from his childhood in Stratford-upon-Avon to his life in London and what is known of his productions. This will give a wonderful insight into this man's life.

Afternoon session – join a panel of experts who will present a range of views on what the plays might really mean and how many of the plots are relevant to modern-day life. There will be the opportunity to ask questions and debate the opinions of the panel.

Saturday 7th August

Morning session – Listen to a lecture on the life of Shakespeare. Professor Helen Smithson will speak about how Shakespeare grew up in Stratford-upon-Avon before moving to London and the development of his work. Then we hear about the influence of his benefactors, who helped him to produce the plays and sonnets that are so loved today.

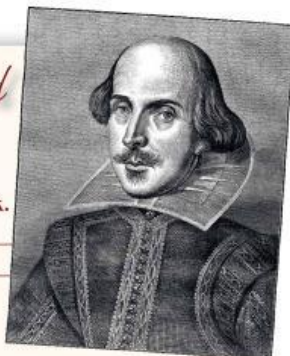

Afternoon session – A workshop that looks at characters in the major Shakespearian plays. There's also the opportunity to interpret these in some acting classes. There will be lots of feedback and discussion afterwards.

Sunday 8th August

Morning session – Meet and talk to some of the UK's top Shakespearian actors and see how they prepare and perform roles. There's also the chance to try on some of the costumes the actors use and see some props used on stage.

Afternoon session – A talk given by actors, leading authorities and experts on Shakespeare. This informative session is a great way to round off the weekend with some interesting debates about what Shakespeare means to different people.

The weekend includes a copy of the complete works of Shakespeare, food and accommodation in the university student accommodation.
