US Education System

In the United States all children must go to school from age five to age sixteen. The school system isn't the same all over the country.

Elementary schools are for children from age 5 to 12. The first year of school is kindergarten and the second year is first grade. There are six years of elementary school altogether.

Children in the middle school are 12-14 years old. Middle school is the same as junior high school and children go to grades 6-8 here.

High school is next, with grades 9-12. Students here are 14-18 years old, but they can leave school at sixteen.

After high school, students can go to junior college for two years or to university for four years.
