I've just read a fascinating article about changes in animal behaviour. 1 _____, it was about the way bird song changes over time. 2 _____ is that scientists thought that birdsong was constant but it now seems that birds are capable of teaching themselves new songs. 3 _____ are as follows. Canadian scientists have found that a bird called the white-throated sparrow has started singing a new song, replacing its traditional call. 4 _____ you need to know is that these sparrows normally all sing the same song which they learn when they are young and continue to sing throughout their lives. 5 _____, but they travel extremely long distances singing the same song wherever they are.	However, when scientists decided to study a group of birds in Western Canada, they noticed something unusual about their song. 6 _____ record the birdsong and compare it with older recordings from Eastern Canada. Those in 7 _____ group sang a pattern of double notes, whereas those in 8 _____ group sang the traditional song, consisting of triple notes. 9 _____, it seemed that some of the birds had taught themselves a new song. So 10 _____ that the scientists listened to recordings from the last seventy years and discovered that, over time, the new song had grown in popularity. It was now being sung by birds all across the country. 11 _____ to what I said at the beginning, it seems that birdsong may evolve in a similar way to human language.
