Question 19-21: Read the text and choose the correct answers

Tropical storms, such as hurricanes and typhoons, can have devastating effects on communities. High winds often destroy homes, uproot trees, and damage power lines. Flooding caused by heavy rains can lead to water contamination and displacement of people. In coastal areas, storm surges bring severe flooding, wiping out buildings and affecting marine ecosystems. Crops are frequently destroyed, leading to food shortages and economic loss. The aftermath of these storms often includes long-term challenges, such as disease outbreaks and a slow recovery process. However, with advanced warning systems, some communities can better prepare, reducing the loss of life and damage. Despite this, tropical storms remain a major threat to many parts of the world.

19. What is the main effect of tropical storms described in the paragraph?

- A. They bring beneficial rain to dry areas.
- B. They cause destruction and long-term challenges.
- C. They help marine ecosystems recover.
- D. They create strong wind power for energy.

20. What typically happens in coastal areas during tropical storms?

- A. Storm surges cause flooding.
- B. Crops are watered.
- C. Trees are planted.
- D. Power lines are repaired.

21. According to the paragraph, what helps reduce the impact of tropical storms?

- A. Storm surges
- B. Water contamination
- C. Advanced warning systems
- D. Economic loss

Question 22-24: Read the following text

Deforestation is the process of cutting down large areas of forests. One major cause is agriculture. People clear forests to create more land for farming, growing crops, or raising livestock. Another cause is logging, where trees are cut down to provide wood for building and making paper. Urbanization also contributes to deforestation. As cities grow, forests are cleared to make space for houses, roads, and factories. Additionally, mining activities destroy forests, as companies need to remove trees to access valuable minerals beneath the ground. Finally, forest fires, whether natural or caused by humans, can lead to large-scale deforestation. These activities harm wildlife, reduce biodiversity, and contribute to climate change by increasing carbon dioxide levels. To reduce deforestation, people must focus on sustainable practices and forest protection.

Fill each blank in the following sentences with ONE word from the text.

Deforestation happens when large areas of forests are cut down. It is mainly caused by (22)_____, logging, (23)_____, mining, and forest fires. These activities lead to the destruction of wildlife habitats and a loss of (24)_____. Deforestation also increases carbon dioxide in the atmosphere, contributing to climate change. To prevent further damage, people need to use sustainable practices and protect forests.
