by Dr. Herman Wright, MD

Dear Dr. Wright,
I'm 18 years old, and lately, I'm noticing that all my friends on social media are talking about having cosmetic surgery. They constantly share information about different cosmetic surgeries or pictures of what they think they'll look like after the surgery. It seems like everyone is doing it. I always thought that cosmetic surgeries weren't that common, but now it seems like having one is a completely normal thing to do. Was I wrong before, or am I wrong now? – Confused in California

Dear Confused in California,
When we see a group of people we're connected with on social media all talk about the same thing, it's very easy to think that people everywhere are having the same conversations. This is just the way social media works: it presents users with posts that are similar, making us think that the posts we see are just like the posts everyone else sees. I encourage you to search for information on websites you can trust. You'll find that your first thought was correct: cosmetic surgery is not common, especially not for teens.

– Dr. Wright

Hi, Dr. Wright,

I'm 16 years old, and I love dying my hair. It's one of my favorite things to do. Last year, I had purple hair and then pink hair. This year, I moved to a new school. After school started, I dyed my hair blue. People from my new school started posting about my hair all over social media. They said some very unkind things. I don't know what to do about it. I like my hair, but I don't want people to talk about me like that online. – Blue in Boise

Dear Blue in Boise,

People say unkind things online that they would never say in person. This means that social media sometimes gives us a distorted view of how others are responding to us. And it can make things seem very important on one day, but then no one will think about the next day. It can be helpful to pause before you react. Wait a day or two and see how you feel then. Think about what you're reading: do you agree with the comments? If not, do what you think is best. You'll only feel worse if you let others decide for you. – Dr. Wright
