School's nearly out and for most teens it's a chance to hang out with friends and enjoy the summer vacation. But if you're sixteen-year-old eco hip-hop artist, it's a busy time of international travel and public speaking. Xiuhtezcatl (roughly pronounced shoo-tez-cat) Martinez became known around the world in 2015, when he gave a talk about climate change to the United Nations General Assembly in New York. It wasn't his long hair and formal suit that got him noticed, but the fact that he started his talk in three different languages: English, Spanish and Nahuatl, the language of the Mexican Mashika or Aztec community.

His passion for the environment comes from the time that Xiuhtezcatl spent in the forest with his dad, where he felt he was 'a big part of this world'. He's had his name since he was six. He got it from older members of the Mashika community and it means 'turquoise mirror' in the Nahuatl language. The community has a strong belief that we are all connected to the world we live in and must protect it and the animals that live in it. He shares this passion with his mom, who set up Earth Guardians, an organization that educates young people and encourages them to protect the environment. However, it was after he'd watched a nature documentary that Xiuhtezcatl decided he could make a difference now.

So where does hip-hop come into all of this? After a rap performance at school with his younger brother, Xiuhtezcatl realized that their lyrics could make people wake up to the problems of pollution and waste. They both now perform at events and festivals around the world. His mom is happy her son is having 'these amazing adventures' but worries all this is taking up a lot of his time. Xiuhtezcatl admits it's intense but is convinced he's doing the right thing.

33. How did the documentary change Xiuhtezcatl?
 - A. He wants to act to protect the environment.
 - B. He'll learn more about Earth Guardians.
 - C. He felt he was different from other young people.
 - D. He'll join his mum's organization.
34. How does Xiuhtezcatl feel about his life at the moment?
 - A. He's not sure he wants to have these amazing adventures.
 - B. He accepts he's busy, but hopes he can make a difference.
 - C. He'd like to have more time to perform at events and festivals.
 - D. He thinks working for the environment takes up too much time.
35. What is the role of hip-hop in his work?
