In 19th century Britain, family life was very important

This period in the history of the UK called the Victorian Era because Queen Victoria, who nine children herself, ruled the country from 1837 to 1901. Victorian people TV or radio, but they enjoyed at home and had their own entertainment. Rich families songs around the piano, and in poor homes, families played the fiddle or the flute. Charades, board games and card games were also very popular. During some celebrations, Victorians visited and everyone waited for the magic lantern show. Picture stories of big wild animals were shown on a screen thanks to light sent through a glass lens. It seems entertainment a lot since the 19th century!
