The Professional Sleeper

Luke is a professional sleeper: he gets paid to sleep! His unique career involves testing and reviewing beds and mattresses for various clients, including mattress manufacturers, hoteliers and hospitals. Luke's workday involves inspecting different types of mattresses, ranging from memory foam to spring. He has to evaluate the comfort and support levels. His goal is to ensure that people get the best night's sleep possible.

Luke's job is not as simple as closing his eyes and sleeping. Luke has to follow a strict routine to remain unbiased in his assessments. He rates each bed based on factors like firmness, overall feel and whether it provides proper spinal support. Throughout the day, Luke moves from one mattress to another, taking short naps to experience different levels of comfort.

This job also has its challenges. Luke sometimes struggles to fall asleep on command, particularly when the environment is not very comfortable. Sometimes, he has to wear monitoring equipment with wires. He also has to follow changes to his routine as advised by a sleep specialist, such as adjusting his sleeping temperature, light source, sound and diet.

Luke must be willing to test products and undergo brain scans for scientific studies as well. For instance, a few years ago, a sleep clinic conducted scans on him to study a sleeping condition called sleep apnea. Luke's profession may seem like a fantasy to many, but it requires dedication and a keen sense of observation. Through his unique role, Luke contributes to the comfort of people worldwide, one sleep test at a time.
