Hi Jared,

I've only just got back to the office, so I need to*catch up on*..... ~~keep up to-~~ ~~date~~ my emails. However, I will get across the problem that you mention and see what has been done to clear up the misunderstanding. I'll bring up with a meeting to highlight the important points so we can avoid this happening again. In the meantime, while I was away a client brought up the issue of data protection. I assured them no procedures had been caught up or overlooked and I hope you can back me up on this.
 Could you speak to them and clear up the message that we take this issue very seriously?

Many thanks.

Tom

5 Choose the correct options.

A: So, what's been (1) making the headlines / commenting on current events / gossiping about recently?

B: Nothing much, it's been so busy we've had no time to (2) make fun of / celebrate your achievement / gossip!

A: Right!

B: Now, I know you've (3) kept amused / up to date / covered the story with your emails so you're aware there are lots of calls that you need to (4) leave out / follow up / get across. There are also a couple of reports that Fran wants you to (5) bring up / look into / bring up as the figures don't add up.

A: OK! Back to work then. Thanks for all your (6) cooperation / collection / criticism while I was away. I'm sorry I had to rush off at the (7) long-distance / last- minute / short-term. It was such a relief to know I had you to (8) clear me up / back me up / leave me out.

B: No problem.
