The hotel with no staff

Fiftyone is a luxury hotel in Davos, Switzerland, but owner Tino Morosani says the idea came from budget airlines.

Morosani wanted to change some old apartments into hotel rooms but there was no space for a reception area or a dining room. Then he thought: Budget airlines have automated check-in so a hotel can have automated check-in, too.

Fiftyone is Davos's first 'automatic' hotel. The entrance looks a bit like a multi-storey car park. There are no staff to greet you. You can't book a room using the phone or e-mail. You must book online. Guests check in with a computer outside the front door. When you arrive, you put a confirmation number into the computer and receive an electronic key, which opens the front door.

The hotel has 24 comfortable rooms and each room has a large bathroom, a balcony and free wi-fi. You can buy breakfast from machines: coffee, apples, bread, orange juice, cereal bars and so on.

You can't see the staff at Fiftyone but they are there. They clean the rooms every day and you can phone them if you have a problem.
