

ใบงานที่ 1 บทอ่านเรื่อง about a Superstition

The hearse, the funeral car carrying a dead person, is a most well-known icon of death and mourning. Since the time of horse drawn hearses, a common belief was that if you saw a hearse, you would be the next to die. To avoid such a horrible curse, in Victor England, it was believed that holding a button could push away the death. Some people held a button until they saw a bird. Others woyld go as far as to hold their breath, close their eye and put their feet up in the air.

One of the more interesting traditions about hearses passing by is taken from Japanese culture. Hiding one's thumb in a fist while the hearse passed was done to protect the parents from an early death.

Another superstition is based on which direction you see the hearse moving. If the hearse is moving toward you and empty, it is onsidered good luck in some parts of the United States. In other earas of the U.S., it could bring on three days of good or bad luck. On the other hand, if a hearse is empty and moving away from you, you are close to death.
