Body Language across Cultures

If you are planning a holiday in another country, you should pay attention to body language across cultures. In the world of travel you may have uncomfortable moments if you give wrong messages. For example, in the Middle East, it is very unkind to show the under-side of one's foot in another person's direction - so crossing your legs while sitting is a bad idea. People from Pakistan move their head from side to side to mean "you're welcome", or "hello". Moving your hand from side to side is understood by Indians as "no" or "go away". In Nigeria, you mustn't use your left hand to give or receive things. This hand is considered dirty. The Maori of New Zealand press noses together and shout to say hello.

You can also see body language differences in the personal space people need when having a conversation. In South America, this space is often small. People stand very close to each other to talk, except when they meet for the first time or are at the office. In the United States this space becomes much larger; people are not as comfortable when others stand close to them, especially when they do not know each other very well. Others whose personal space is small are the Arabs, French and Italians, while the Germans and Japanese need more.

7. In India, what should you use to tell someone to leave?

- a. your food
- b. your eyes
- c. your hand
- d. your ears
- e. your head
