WHAT IT MEANS TO WORK AS A LIBRARY ASSISTANT

When I finished high school, I wasn't sure what to study at university. I loved reading books, so I decided to study English Literature. After I graduated, I found a job in a small local library. I enjoyed working there but wanted to try something bigger. That's when I applied for a position at the city's central library, and luckily, I got the job.

As a library assistant, I work six days a week. My tasks include helping visitors find the books they need, organizing shelves, and making sure everything is in the right place. Sometimes, I also help run events like reading clubs or workshops for children. I really enjoy working with people who share my love for books and learning.

The best part of my job is when I get to recommend books to visitors. I've read many novels, so I can usually find something that matches what people like. It feels amazing to know that I've helped someone discover a new favorite book. However, it's not always easy. We get lots of visitors, and some days can be very busy, especially during school holidays.

I don't earn a lot of money as a library assistant, but I feel happy with my work. Being surrounded by books and people who love them is worth more than a big paycheck to me. I also love the quiet, peaceful atmosphere of the library - it's the perfect place to spend my days. I'm not sure if I will work here forever, but for now, it's the ideal job for me.
